the morning, kicked the furniture about a bit, and went down to his breakfast in rare good humor. Instead of glowering at his breakfast, he would inquire, with what seems to us true inspiration: "Is this food poisoned?"

Somehow, the wife did not like this originality. Yet the husband was a doctor, and surely had a right to make his pleasant inquiry. The food might have been poisoned mightn't it?

Furthermore, this original husband signed a contract reading: "I agree not to annoy my wife by kissing or caressing her, to confine my conversation to impersonal or business topics, so that our lives may be as tolerable as possible, and to have my guests, if I happen to have any, to myself." Here we have, in all truth, a modern and affectionate husband, determined to leave boredom behind, to shake off habit, and to leave his wife free from all perfunctory annoyances. And yet, what results? The wife sues him for ed one of their excerient suppers at their rooms Friday evening.
